Akera Health

The reply, when it came, was a good one. Nothing came before it.

One test enquiry to the HRBR number, and what the quiet before the reply suggests.

OBSERVED – WHATSAPP ENQUIRY, HRBR NUMBER

MON 10 AUG Sent to the clinic's WhatsApp, asking about acne scarring.
4:23 PM

NO ACKNOWLEDGEMENT IN BETWEEN – AUTOMATED OR HUMAN
TUE 11 AUG First reply: "Hi may I know what treatment you are looking for?"
11:31 AM

A real message to the clinic's own number, three hours before closing.

Nineteen hours is what happened. It could happen because nothing on that number answers on its own – so a message arriving while the desk is busy is indistinguishable from one that arrived overnight. Both are simply unread.

WHY THIS MATTERS

A slow reply is at least visible – someone answers, and remembers the wait. An enquiry nothing acknowledges leaves no trace: that person never became a patient, so no report lists them.

CONFIRMED FROM OUTSIDE

- ✓ 4.9★ at both branches – 315 reviews at HSR, 361 at HRBR.
- ✓ Once a person joined the thread: twelve minutes to a treatment answer, eight more to full pricing.

CAN'T CONFIRM WITHOUT YOUR DATA

- Whether nineteen hours is typical, or Monday was unusual. One enquiry can't tell you.
- How many enquiries land on that number weekly, and whether both branches share an inbox.

WHAT WE'D CHECK FIRST, IF WE HAD ACCESS

- The last thirty days of enquiries, timestamped – how long each waited, how many got nothing.
- Whether a first message that answers on its own could capture the concern, branch and timing, so whoever picks it up isn't starting from scratch.

What we're not saying: this isn't a case for replacing anyone – whoever picked that thread up did it properly. Nor about making patients talk to a machine. It's about the hours when nobody is free to type.

This isn't unique to Akera. The real question isn't whether one enquiry waited nineteen hours – it's how many did last month, with no record that they arrived.

You can answer this without us: scroll back two weeks on that number and count the people who asked something and never got a second message. If it's worth doing properly, we'd map thirty days of enquiries at no cost to the clinic.
