Dermaville Skin Clinic

Answers every review. Missed the enquiry.

We tested Dermaville's WhatsApp last week. What we found says less about one missed message, and more about whether anything exists to catch it when nobody's free to answer.

OBSERVED – WHATSAPP ENQUIRY TEST

11:02 AM A stretch-marks enquiry was sent to the clinic's WhatsApp.
SENT, STRETCH MARKS

NO ACKNOWLEDGMENT FOLLOWED

NO REPLY No human response came back – and no automated
NO AUTO-REPLY EITHER acknowledgment stepped in to cover the gap.

This was a real message sent to the clinic's own WhatsApp number, not a guess.

One missed enquiry could be a busy morning. What's notable isn't that no one replied – it's that nothing did. No automated acknowledgment stepped in for the gap, so an enquiry landing while the team's occupied simply disappears, with no record it ever happened.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Dermaville has treated patients from HSR Layout since 2012, across dermatology, cosmetology, and hair transplant – categories where a first-time enquiry usually comes from a search or a referral, not brand recall. No Meta or Google ad activity was found, so there's no paid channel to re-target someone who goes quiet; every enquiry here is a person who found the clinic on their own. If nobody's watching the phone in that exact moment, that patient has no reason to try again – they simply move to whoever answers first.

CONFIRMED FROM OUTSIDE

- ✓ A stretch-marks enquiry sent to Dermaville's WhatsApp at 11:02 AM got no response of any kind – no automated acknowledgment, no human reply.
- ✓ No Meta or Google ad activity found – enquiries here come from organic search, referral, and social reach, not paid traffic that can be re-targeted.
- ✓ Reviews repeatedly mention front-desk phone responsiveness, even though the clinic replies to every single negative review individually, by name.

CAN'T CONFIRM WITHOUT YOUR DATA

- Whether this was an unusually busy morning or a pattern that repeats across the week.
- How many enquiries land on WhatsApp or Instagram in a typical week, and how many get the same silence.

WHAT WE'D CHECK FIRST, IF WE HAD ACCESS

- Whether a simple auto-acknowledgment – "we've got your message, someone will respond shortly" – would stop an enquiry like this from disappearing without a trace.
- How many enquiries the front desk is actually missing during busy hours, versus how many are just slow to answer.

What we're not saying: the clinic doesn't care – it replies to every single negative review individually, by name, which most clinics don't bother doing. This isn't about neglect. This is only about whether anything catches the moment someone reaches out, if nobody's free to answer right then.

This isn't unique to Dermaville – most clinics that reply carefully to reviews assume the same care carries through to enquiries as they come in. The real question isn't whether this one stretch-marks question got answered; it's how many people reach out on a day nobody's watching the phone, and simply never hear back.

A full audit – mapping exactly how many enquiries go unanswered and unacknowledged in a typical week – takes about 30 minutes, at no cost to the clinic.
