

OPERATIONS FINDINGS

Aurilueur Esthetic Clinic

What you told us on Thursday, what we could check from outside, and the one thing we'd look at first before Tuesday.

01 • WHAT YOU TOLD US

In your own words, from Thursday's call

You told us Aurilueur's enquiries and patient communication run through two to three people at the clinic — for the one branch. You agreed the volume coming in is high. Separately, we messaged your WhatsApp ourselves, as a patient would — a person replied straight away, no bot, no holding message. Whoever is on that phone is genuinely good at it.

We've kept this section short rather than pad it with more than we actually heard — if any of it reads slightly off from what you meant, tell us Tuesday and we'll fix it before writing anything else down.

02 • WHAT WE COULD VERIFY FROM OUTSIDE

Checked today, without speaking to anyone

Google is currently showing seven of your ads in the last seven days — five of them yesterday alone. On Meta, two campaigns are live at the same time: one running since 10 July, a second since 14 August. Both platforms, running together, right now, on top of the volume you already described as high.

03 • WHAT WE STILL CAN'T SEE

The honest gaps

We still can't see how many enquiries actually land across WhatsApp, Instagram and calls in an average week, how the three of you currently divide who takes what, or what happens to someone after they're quoted and don't book straightaway. None of that showed up in an hour on the phone — and from what you described, it didn't sound fully visible from inside the clinic either, which is worth saying plainly rather than glossing over.

04 • THE TWO THINGS WE'D LOOK AT FIRST

Ranked by what they appear to cost

01 Three people, one phone number, nothing written down

Confirmed — mystery shop + what you told us

Whoever answers a message handles it their own way, from their own memory. If the same number is messaged twice and two different people reply, there's currently no place where that shows up as one enquiry rather than two — not because anyone's careless, but because nothing exists to catch it.

02 The ads are adding to a queue that's already full

Confirmed spend, open question on outcome

Every enquiry those ads bring in lands in the same three-person inbox as everything else. There's no way, right now, to tell an enquiry you paid for apart from one that arrived on its own — so there's also no way to tell whether that spend is working harder than the rest of the queue, or simply adding to it.

05 • WHAT WE'D DO FIRST

One thing, not both — and here's why

Of the two, we'd start with the first. It's true regardless of where an enquiry comes from, and it's the fastest to actually see. Two to three weeks, at no cost:

01 Week 1 — The list that doesn't exist yet

We sit with your WhatsApp threads from the last couple of weeks and build one running record of every enquiry that came in, who replied, and what happened next. You see it before it goes anywhere.

02 Week 2 — Nothing changes for the three of you

You keep working exactly as you do now. Every new enquiry lands on the same list automatically, so nothing depends on whoever happens to pick up remembering to log it.

03 Week 3 — We look at it together

If a pattern's there — something answered twice, or not followed up at all — you'll see it yourself, not take our word for it.

06 • WHAT WE'D NEED FROM YOU

01 THREADS

The WhatsApp threads from the last couple of weeks — the messages themselves are enough, nothing to prepare or export.

02 ONE PERSON

One of the three of you we can check in with briefly if something needs a decision.

03 30 MIN

Before we start, to walk through what we saw and agree what the list should capture. Nothing leaves the clinic's own systems.

07 • If it doesn't work

If the list doesn't turn up anything worth acting on, that's a real answer too — and you won't owe us anything for finding it out. Either way, you'll have something you don't currently have: one place that shows what happened to every enquiry that came in.
