

PREPARED FOR

Dr. Tina’s Skin Solutionz

Two enquiries, months apart. Neither left a record of what the patient came for.

About the first few minutes after someone messages the clinic.

OBSERVED – TWO WHATSAPP ENQUIRIES

FRI 14 AUG · 1:25 PM
INSIDE PUBLISHED HOURS

A message asking about treatments. The chat runs on Meta’s business platform; nothing acknowledged it. Twenty minutes later, one reply: “Good afternoon sir or ma’am, kindly come down and consult the doctor for further discussion.” No question about what was needed. No day or time offered.

● |
AN EARLIER TEST
SAME NUMBER, JUST AFTER MIDNIGHT

Nothing acknowledged that one either. At that hour nobody would expect a person to answer — which is when an automatic reply earns its place.

Both were real messages to the clinic’s own listed number — Friday’s mid-way through published hours.

Someone asking about acne scars and someone asking about hair fall get the same sentence, and both leave the same trace: none. So there is no way to count how many arrive, or how many never come back.

WHY THIS MATTERS

2,927 Google reviews at 4.7 means a steady flow of people finding the clinic and messaging before they book. Every one waits for somebody to be free to type a reply by hand, and none leave anything behind.

CONFIRMED FROM OUTSIDE

- ✓ 2,927 Google reviews at 4.7 stars, checked 14 August 2026.
- ✓ Google’s review topics: polite staff on 44 reviews, patient listening on 37, waiting time on 28.

CAN’T CONFIRM WITHOUT YOUR DATA

- How many enquiries arrive in a week, and how many become someone sitting in the clinic.
- Whether “come and consult” is what every first message gets, or only what mine got.

WHAT WE’D CHECK FIRST, IF WE HAD ACCESS

- Whether anything is written down when an enquiry arrives, and whether that person came in.
- How many people message once and never hear back.

What we’re not saying: this isn’t about the person who replied — they answered, and they were polite. It isn’t about making the clinic feel automated either. Only the stretch before the consultation, where nothing is written down.

Scroll back two weeks in the clinic’s WhatsApp and count how many people asked something and never got a second message. Nobody outside can work that out — it is already sitting on the phone.

Worth a closer look? A ten-minute drop-in at the clinic, or a short call — whichever is easier. I would map how enquiries reach you now, and show exactly which parts can run on their own and which should stay with your team. At no cost to the clinic.