

PREPARED FOR

Gejje's Marvella

Your welcome message asks for three things. Two replies later, none of them had come up.

An automatic message that asks exactly the right questions, and what happened to the answers.

OBSERVED – ONE ENQUIRY, 10–11 AUGUST

"Kindly share your concern"	NEVER ASKED AGAIN
"...your preferred location"	NEVER ASKED
"...and photos, if comfortable"	NEVER MENTIONED

The two replies that followed, in full: "Hlo... yes tell me", and the next afternoon, "Yes . Treatment available" and "Visit the clinic".

A real enquiry to the clinic's own number, both replies inside working hours.

Somebody built that welcome message knowing exactly what a patient should be asked. Whatever the patient sends back doesn't appear to reach whoever replies next — so every thread starts from nothing, which is what "yes tell me" sounds like from the other side.

WHY THIS MATTERS

An automatic message is only intake if the answers go somewhere. Otherwise it's an introduction — a good one, but the patient has described their concern twice before anyone read it once. Most don't do it a third time.

CONFIRMED FROM OUTSIDE

- ✓ 5.0★ across 870 Google reviews, arriving continuously. The clinic is very well regarded by the people who reach it.
- ✓ No Meta or Google ads found. These enquiries are arriving on reputation and referral, not on spend.

CAN'T CONFIRM WITHOUT YOUR DATA

- Whether the concern, location and photographs a patient sends are recorded anywhere, or sit in a thread nobody re-reads.
- Whether someone who telephones the clinic gets asked the three questions the message asks for.

WHAT WE'D CHECK FIRST, IF WE HAD ACCESS

- ➔ The last month of enquiries — how many patients answered the welcome message, and how many were asked about it after.
- ➔ Whether those three answers could reach whoever opens the thread, so the first human message isn't "yes tell me".

What we're not saying: the welcome message isn't the problem — it asks better questions than most clinics ask at all, and should stay exactly as it is. This isn't about the team not caring either. It's the handover between the two.

A patient who has already described their concern, named their branch and sent photographs is the easiest booking in the diary. The question is whether anyone ever sees that they did.

You can check without us: open any thread that starts with the welcome message and see whether the reply beneath mentions what the patient answered. If it's worth doing properly, we'd map thirty days at no cost to the clinic.
