

PREPARED FOR

Project Skin

The only message that didn't lead anywhere was the one that promised to.

What happened on the day of the promise, and what happened when the patient chased it himself.

OBSERVED – ONE ENQUIRY, 10-12 AUGUST

“Thanks for reaching out! We will get back to you soon.”

SENT AUTOMATICALLY, MON 4:43 PM

THAT DAY
MONDAY Nothing followed it. More than three hours of the working day remained.

NEXT DAY
HE MESSAGED AGAIN 2:24 PM, he asked a second time himself. A person answered at 2:25 – sixty seconds – and full pricing followed the next afternoon.

Real messages to the clinic's own WhatsApp number.

When a message is in front of this team they answer it in a minute. What's missing is anything that puts an unanswered thread back in front of them – so the people who read “we'll get back to you soon”, believe it, and wait are the ones nobody sees again.

WHY THIS MATTERS

An enquiry that gets nothing at all is at least obvious later. One that gets a warm automatic reply feels handled – to the patient, and to whoever glances at the inbox afterwards. It's the promise that makes it invisible.

CONFIRMED FROM OUTSIDE

- ✓ Eleven Google creatives running continuously since June 2025, one of them live the day before this enquiry.
- ✓ The website's only enquiry route is a form asking for name, number and email – no treatment, no concern, no timing. The WhatsApp number that sends the automatic reply isn't linked anywhere on the site.

CAN'T CONFIRM WITHOUT YOUR DATA

- Whether that automatic reply notifies anyone, or simply sends.
- How many threads are sitting acknowledged and unanswered right now.

WHAT WE'D CHECK FIRST, IF WE HAD ACCESS

- The last month of enquiries – how many got the welcome message and nothing after it.
- Whether paid search traffic could land on the number that already replies automatically, instead of a three-field form.

What we're not saying: this isn't a case that the team is slow – sixty seconds is faster than nearly anyone manages. And we can't tell you nobody would ever have replied on the Monday, because the patient messaged again and ended the test. What we can say is that a promise went out automatically, and twenty-two hours passed.

The patients who chased you got a good clinic. The ones who believed the message and waited are the ones nobody has counted.

You can start without us: search that number for the welcome message and see how many threads end on it. If it's worth going through properly, we'd map thirty days at no cost to the clinic.
